

Yeast Eaters

Susto is rich in Yeast, Rice, Milk Eggs, Iron, and Beef Protein — You'll like its taste

APPROVED BY SCIENTISTS
after months of clinical tests at one of America's greatest medical colleges.

SUSTO contains all the Vitamins of yeast and in addition the Vitamins of rice, eggs, milk, beef, etc., all the vitamins, A, B, C, which are absolutely necessary to prevent starvation and promote growth and strength.

If you are out in a boat for a week without food, SUSTO alone would sustain life and nourish you.

SUSTO contains in addition to all the known Vitamins iron, calcium and protein which makes it the most perfect tonic food obtainable.

Not one ounce of SUSTO was offered to the public until its tonic food value was definitely established after months of practical tests by Dr. Philip B. Hawk, Professor of Physiological Chemistry of Jefferson Medical College.

SUSTO therefore is the only tonic nutritive on which thousands of dollars were spent in clinical and scientific tests to prove its therapeutic and food value before being placed on the market. These tests extended over months and proved indisputably that SUSTO is a most efficient ration balancer and if added to the daily food three times a day will remedy and prevent malnutrition and its allied diseases.

NOTE TO PHYSICIANS

Bible Thought For Today
Fruitage of Secret Prayer—But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. For thy father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.—Matt. 6: 6, 8.

SPENCE TALKS ON HOG CHOLERA

County Agents Gives Madison Farmers Some Valuable Pointers On Disease

County Agent R. F. Spence, of Berea, sends the Daily Register some important facts about hog cholera, and how to prevent or cure it, for the benefit of the farmers of Madison county. He writes:

Hog cholera is a disease that kills hogs and first of all we must recognize the fact that the success or failure in handling this disease will depend upon the farmer himself.

To control and eradicate hog cholera on a farm and to prevent its spread in a community, the following precautions are necessary:

Any pig showing evidence of ill health should be separated from the rest of the herd and closely observed for developments. Depression, loss of appetite and a high temperature, are always suggestive of hog cholera. It is, however, not always possible to make a positive diagnosis of hog cholera from simply observing sick pig. Therefore, if a hog dies, a post mortem should be held and the organs carefully examined for the lesions of cholera. In a large herd where no dead hogs are available for post mortem, it is often advisable to kill a sick hog for examination. It often happens that when cholera infection occurs in a healthy herd, one individual will sicken and die some days before the herd as a whole shows evidence of sickness. Therefore, it is important to know the cause of death of the first pig that dies. If the premises are badly infected, a number of pigs may sicken at about the same time.

Burn or bury deeply all pigs that die, regardless of the cause of their death.

All pigs purchased and brought to the farm should be kept under close observation, in separate quarters, for at least three weeks.

If pigs are sick and recover, following good care or a change of feed, or the administration of a medicinal agent or a so-called hog cholera remedy, it is unwise to assume that such treatment is specific for hog cholera, but rather that the disease from which the hogs suffered was not cholera. Many infections and parasitic diseases of swine, and also various forms of malnutrition and unthriftness clinically resemble hog cholera in some respects.

The virus of hog cholera may retain its vitality outside the pig's body for many months. Experimental work on pen infection and records of infected farms show that the life of the hog cholera virus varies greatly, depending upon conditions. Destruction of the virus may be hastened by doing away with conditions that protect it. Thorough cleaning and disinfection of hog houses and lots is essential. Every corner and covered place must be cleaned, if success in destroying the virus is expected. The accumulation of coals, leaves, straw, boards, litter, manure, waste-feeds, bones, cans, bottles, pieces of tin, and any rubbish that protects the underlying soil from the sun and air, all no doubt furnish a certain amount of protection to the virus and prolong its vitality and continuation on the premises.

Clean the hog house of all litter and dirt; spray with an antiseptic and apply white wash or paint. Rake up and remove or burn every particle of waste and rubbish in and about the pens and yards. Use air-slacked lime freely in the yards adjacent to the hog house, from time to time on the ground where the pigs are fed.

Do not go into the hog lots on other farms where there is infection, and do not permit others to enter your hog lots.

If healthy hogs have access to a stream that comes thru farms where cholera exists, there is danger that they may become infected.

A Rat That Didn't Smell After Being Dead for 3 Months
"I swear it was dead for at least three months," said James Sykes, butcher, Westfield, N. J. "We saw this rat every day. Put a cake of RAT-SNAP behind a barrel. Months later my wife asked about the rat. Remembered the barrel, looked behind it and there was the rat dead—not theed excellent screen material. The slightest odor." Three sizes, 35c, 65c, $1.25. Sold and guaranteed by Douglas & Simmons and Stockton and Son.

Proper management of a hog farm includes the construction of appropriate buildings and the suitable arrangements of pens and drainage, thorough cleanliness and sanitation, with proper feeding and plenty of clean water. Such management will accomplish wonders in preventing losses from infections and parasitic diseases and other causes. In GA. LTW. SPENCE TALKS this manner half of the pigs that died under three months of age, could probably be saved.

Do It Now
An acre plowed while work is slack is time saved next spring. The county agent heartily agrees with what the Southern Agriculturalist has lately had to say about fall plowing.

The writer has recently been between the plow handles in turning some sod land for corn and potatoes next year. Now that ten-acre field is plowed and ready for winter freezes, to gather winter rains and for the tens of thousands of grub worms turned up to freeze or at least to be made uncomfortable. These advantages are well understood but he could not help but think that he was glad that some of the clouds in some packed ground would have several months in which rain and freeze would vie with each other in breaking them down before time to plant a crop there.

Still, after all the big thing is the preparation this year for next year's crop. It is like a bank account of old corn in the crib when the new crop comes in. It is getting ahead of the game, or in the game. With just a two-horse plow and the feeding to do it is the putting behind us of seven or eight days of next year's work. In some Februarys we have no plowing weather as we have in March. On a one-team farm this ten-acre fall plowing may mean almost a month saved in the spring, for plowing weather is generally abundant in the late fall and is liable to be scarce in February and March. It is worth straining to the limit to get started at fall plowing, then it will be easier than it has been not to do it; for the work can be kept up better clear through the season.
